Partea I: CITIT

Today, when you walk down any British high street, you are sure to pass at least one charity shop. It is an important way for charities to raise money for their particular good cause, which can be anything from fighting disease to helping stray animals. These shops mostly sell second-hand goods like clothes, books and toys which members of the public have donated. Some of them also sell new items like greeting cards and even jewellery. Perhaps one of the best known charities in the UK, Oxfam, sells fair-trade food and crafts alongside its second-hand items. Oxfam was the first charity to open a charity shop in the late 1940s in Oxford, England. Today, there are around 750 Oxfam shops in the UK alone, helping to raise money to fight poverty around the world.

We all know that recycling is good for the environment, but I recently found out that it can also help people in need. Our school, and many other schools, youth clubs, sports clubs and other organisations have started collecting bottle tops. I think it will take a long time, but when we have collected enough bottle tops, we will be able to exchange them for a wheelchair!

I don't know who thought of it, but I think it's a brilliant idea! All you have to do is provide a bin, bucket or box for people to put their bottle tops in, inform everyone why you are collecting them – posters are a good way of letting everyone know – and that's it! It takes a little time for people to remember not to throw the top away with the bottle, but, like everything else, people get used to doing it.

3. What does the writer tell us about the places that recycle bottle tops?

- a) Some schools have been doing it for a long time.
- b) The writer's school is the only one doing it.
- c) Different organisations are doing it.
- d) The writer's school needs to do it.

4. In the writer's opinion, why do people not start recycling their bottle tops immediately?

- a) They forget to do it.
- b) They don't know how to do it.
- c) There isn't anywhere to put them.
- d) They didn't use to do it.
